

THE CLOTHING TRADE AND TAILORS' HIGH PRICES.—The N. Y. Independent has the following paragraph:

"The wholesale clothiers are doing very little. The general business stagnation affects this as well as other branches of trade. Though cold weather is hastening on, few of the retail merchants have purchased their winter stock. The retailers and the merchant tailors keep up the current prices, knowing that the quantity of goods in the market is not larger than there will be a demand for, and believing that by and by the public will be compelled to accede to the prices demanded. In view of the temporary dullness in their own wholesale branch, and of the extravagant demands of the smaller traders, one of the largest firms in the trade signalized the present week by throwing open its entire wholesale stock, valued at half a million of dollars, at retail, to all comers, at wholesale rates. They opened Monday, 10th inst., and are now absorbing a large portion of the custom of the city, at prices about fifty per cent. lower than the cost of goods made to order."
